French American School of Princeton Hosts First Admissions Event of 2019-20 School Year

Princeton, NJ –Today, the French American School of Princeton (FASP) Office of Admissions hosted prospective families during its first open house of the 2019-20 school year.

The two-hour morning event gathered FASP school administrators and prospective families for an open discussion about FASP, its programs and the benefits of a strong bilingual education. During the discussion, parents asked questions about the school and its curriculum, allowing for a close dialogue with key administrators of the school.

“We’re always eager for the first open house of the school year,” said Marie Lavigne, FASP Director of Admissions. “We like to utilize this style of discussion, so attendees feel comfortable with asking questions, while getting to know a bit about the school and its programs.

FASP currently offers education for children starting at the age of three through the eighth grade. By the second grade, all students are fluent in both English and French, creating a fully bilingual environment within the FASP community.

At the conclusion of the open discussion, parents received a tour of the campus and observed classes while they were in session.

“The tour portion of the event is a great opportunity for families to see the school while classes are in session,” said Lavigne. “This allows them to envision their child at FASP, through seeing students who are currently enrolled at our school. It really helps parents who are considering choosing a school for their child, to choose FASP.”

FASP will host its next open house on Dec. 6th.
